Title Page

Prompt Language Doesn't Matter, but Keep the Original Text: Large Language Models and Sentiment Analysis in French News

Short title: Prompt Language Doesn't Matter

Authors

1. Laurence-Olivier M. Foisy, Département de science politique, Université Laval, Québec, Canada
2. Jules Piral, Département de science politique, Université Laval, Québec, Canada
3. Camille Pelletier, Département de science politique, Université Laval, Québec, Canada
4. Étienne Proulx, Département de science politique, Université Laval, Québec, Canada
5. Adam Ménard, Département de science politique, Université Laval, Québec, Canada
6. Yannick Dufresne, Département de science politique, Université Laval, Québec, Canada

All authors conducted the research at Université Laval.

Corresponding Author

Laurence-Olivier M. Foisy
Département de science politique, Université Laval
2325, rue de l'Université, Québec (Québec) G1V 0A6, Canada
Phone: [to be added]
Email: mail@mfoisy.com

Acknowledgements

Not applicable.

Author Contributions

[To be completed at submission: contribution of each author, following the CRediT taxonomy.]

Declaration of Conflicting Interests

The authors declared no potential conflicts of interest with respect to the research, authorship, and/or publication of this article.

Funding Statement

The authors received no financial support for the research, authorship, and/or publication of this article.

Ethical Approval and Informed Consent

This study involved no human participants and collected no personal data. The 200 benchmark sentences were coded by members of the research team. Ethics approval and informed consent were therefore not required.

Data Availability Statement

The code, the model scores, the manually annotated benchmark, and the prompts are available at https://github.com/clessn/mpsa_beyond_language. The full texts of the news articles were obtained from the Eureka database under license and cannot be redistributed; the article identifiers needed to retrieve them are provided in the repository.